Chapter 1.

The Dawn

The world has always been the same. Same lives, same people, same days. But only one thing changed every day: the dawn. One day it was black like charcoal, with crimson shades; people called it the Dead Dawn. The other day it was as rose as the sakura's petals, with dark-purple clouds swarming around; this was the Peace Dawn. I personally have experienced lots of different shades and colours, but the four main Dawns are Dead Dawn, Peace Dawn, Blood Dawn and Wondrous Dawn. They were all different. Until today...

Ida woke up with a screaming pain in her head. She looked outside. It was still mid-evening. But where is the dawn? She decided to wait near the window to catch at least a slight glimpse of the magnificent sight. At last it flashed in the horizon, twirling upwards towards the sky and then...

Ida saw blood-red words appear in the Dead Dawn.

I will battle until the end!

The dawn seemed to have heard her words:

"Then follow the sword."

Suddenly a blood-curdling shriek pierced the silence. The sky cracked in half and revealed the crimson liquid underneath. A blazing sword came out of the crack, covered in pitiless flames, and flew into Ida's trembling hands. As soon as the first spark of fire touched her fingers, the sword lit up with aquamarine flames and soon cooled down. It guided Ida's hands to slash the window apart, and there was a portal, waiting for her. She stepped in, and she didn't realize, what a big mistake she made.
